We have had a higher proportion of proceedings papers submitted after presentations this year, and this combined with the increase in the number of presentations has meant that there were 40% more papers published online this year than last year. The papers continue to cover a wide variety of topics and are of good quality. Metrics show that the papers are being read and cited.

In the past RME have promoted the proceedings papers by publishing the abstracts. We have discussed whether this is the best use of the RME's limited space and decided that it is important to maintain this opportunity for exposure, but that abstracts will now be replaced with a 2-3 sentence introduction to their work. Authors are now asked to submit this introduction along with their paper and abstract.

Proceedings have now been archived in a more organised and retrievable manner.
